“In the 1960’s and 1970’s capitalism had to face the problem of how to contain and absorb energies from outside. It now, in fact, has the opposite problem; having all-too successfully incorporated externality, how can it function without an ‘outside’ it can colonize and appropriate?”

“What we have here is a vision of control and communication much as Jean Baudrillard understood it, in which subjugation no longer takes the form of a subordination to an extrinsic spectacle, but rather invites us to interact and participate.”

“A film like Wall-E exemplified what Robert Pfaller has called ‘interpassivity’; the film performs our anti-capitalism for us, allowing us to continue to consume with impunity.”

“It the concept of ideology is the classic one in which the illusion is located in knowledge, then today’s society must appear post-ideological,”

“The fundamental level of ideology is not of an illusion masking the real state of things, but that of an (unconscious) fantasy structuring our social reality itself.”

“So it’s important to see neo-liberalism partly then as a symptom of leftist failure, a symptom of the leftist failure to hegemonize, operationalize, instrumentalize; absorb these desires that emerged in the 60’s.”

“The heavily-armed troops of Romulus, three thousand in number, as Dio tells us in the first portion of his history, were divided into three bodies called tribus, i.e. trittyes [thirds], which the Greeks also termed phylai. Each trittys was divided into ten curiae, or ‘thinking bodies’ (for cura means thought); and the men severally met by curiae, according as they had been assigned, and thought out the business at hand.”

“A part of how it did that was by absorbing and metabolizing the desire to freedom and autonomy that emerged in the wake of the 60’s.”

"What counts as 'realistic', what seems possible at any point in the social field, is defined by a series of political determinations. An ideological position can never be really successful until it is naturalized, and it cannot be naturalized while it is still thought of as a value, rather than a fact."

"As any number of radical theorists from Brecht through to Foucault and Badiou have maintained, emancipatory politics must always destroy the appearance of 'a natural order', must reveal what is presented as necessary and inevitable to be a mere contingency, just as it must make what was previously deemed to be impossible seem attainable."

"'Modernization', Badiou bitterly observes, is the name for a strict and servile definition of the possible. These 'reforms' invariably aim at making impossible what used to be practicable (for the largest number), and making profitable (for the dominant oligarchy), what did not used to be so." and perhaps the coerced social and moral order is imposed to keep population at pace and within the confines of this herding "progression" and neoliberalization??

“The Reality Principle itself is ideologically mediated; one could even claim that it constitutes the highest form of ideology, the ideology that presents itself as empirical fact (or biological, economic... necessity) (and that we tend to perceive as non-ideological) it is precisely here that we should be most alert to the functioning of ideology.”

“For Lacan, the Real is what any ‘reality’ must suppress; indeed, reality constitutes itself through just this repression.”

“ the second paradigm, constricted potentiality, is an alternative that features the interpretation of conditions as more important than the conditions themselves.”

“If persuasion is successful, there will be changes in material conditions, - policies will change, certain individuals will be elected to office, injustices will be remedied.”
constricted potentiality, - “In contrast, in the paradigm of constructed potentiality, communicators make use of a strategy of interpretation rather than persuasion to accomplish change.”

“A situation is interpreted differently by deliberately choosing different symbols to think and talk about that situation’ *We also remembered a story our father told about the power of interpretation. He was trying to get to sleep in a hot room and couldn’t get the window to open. Finally, in frustration, he threw his shoe at the window to break it and immediately felt the cool breeze coming in and was able to sleep. In the morning, he realized he had broken the mirror in the room, and not the window.’ Generating different framings.”

“as Postman famously argued, when television was the dominant medium, (as it was in the global West during the late twentieth century), television’s ‘bias’ is toward entertainment; thus, all of the culture’s other institutions prioritize entertainment as well.”, “the media ‘emerges as an independent institution with a logic of its own, to which other, social institutions have to accommodate.”, “On the other hand, media simultaneously became an integrated part of other institutions like politics, work, family, and religion. As more and more of these institutional activities are performed through both interactive and mass media.”

"According to Baudrillard, rationality exists because humans cannot bear to think of the world as an illusion, so they make it exist and signify at all costs – removing all evidence of its arbitrary, accidental character and making sure nothing is left to chance. In fact, what humans are doing is producing a simulacrum called reality."

"Fatal strategies, like seduction itself, offer a return to a world of illusion before rationality."

"He offers a comparison: 'the only difference between a banal theory and a fatal theory is that in the former, the subject always believes itself to be more clever than the object, while in the latter the object is always taken to be more clever, more cynical, more ingenious than the subject - which it awaits at every turn.' - In fact, the strategies of the object exceed the subject's understanding; the world is much more active, passionate, and magical than human can know, and the object is in control."
